Zombie Properties! You've seen them — the decrepit, abandoned, or nuisance homes that create an eyesore, and run down the neighborhood's property values. Governments and government agencies also dislike them and are eager to return them to the tax rolls.

This overlooked and little known investment acquisition strategy can result in a windfall for you, and a better quality of life for the neighborhood in which the strategy is deployed.

Learn the secrets to securing the right to turn garbage into gold by following this strategy and becoming a Certified Lien Abatement Specialist.

Properties for Cents on the Dollar

Whether the properties are currently occupied, or have been abandoned, in a vast majority of the cases decrepit, dilapidated properties are there for the asking. These properties don't end up in the condition they are in because the owners have a lot of interest in them. In fact, the owner is probably behind on the taxes, the mortgage payment, and has ignored code enforcement notices demanding clean up.

HELD PERIODICALLY IN REGIONAL LOCATIONS

Lien Abatement Specialist Certification trainings are held in regional locations throughout the United States.

"Extremely glad my wife and I came. It was everything we wanted and more. Getting in on the ground floor of this subject is the reason we did this. Lee is a great teacher with the integrity that we need to partner with."

Neil Petersen

Eyesores

They look terrible. The property has no upkeep; there might be a vehicle on blocks, a couch or an abandoned refrigerator randomly scattered around the yard. The grounds are unkempt, and the doors and windows may even be boarded.

Neighbors hate the properties. They bring down the property values of every neighbor's home. The city hates them. Not only is the owner probably behind on taxes, but because the entire neighborhood's taxable value is lower than it should be, less money comes into the city coffers to fund city services than would come in if the property was up to code.

Partnering

Learn how to partner with governmental agencies returning zombie properties to performing, conforming real estate to the benefit of the neighborhood -- and reap the profits.
